'Relocators' are back

Here follows word by word the last leading article by eng. Mauro Scasso (IIS general secretary) which was published on the January/February issue of the Rivista Italiana della Saldatura. It is an extremely interesting starting point since it supplies very relevant suggestions for all the professional fields. "They had left Italy, mainly at the end of the '90s and beginning of the 2000s, taking capital, assets and entrepreneurial skills to the Eastern European countries and elsewhere. On the one hand, they were attracted by the very appealing conditions of market penetration and by the low labour costs and on the other they were driven by national institutions not really careful to the firms' problems. These are the 'relocators', mainly the small ones. These latter are concerned with two decisive topics, repeatedly recalled in this context: the use of advanced technological processes and ..read more
